PannErgy and Mannvit hold a presentation at a prestigious international professional conference

Organized by Jacob Fleming firm, the “Renewable Energy Finance & Infrastructure Summit (Europe)” conference will be held between 27 and 29 January 2010 in Vienna to host the key stakeholders, actors of the renewable energy sector and all the other interested parties. PannErgy and its strategic partner from Iceland have been invited as presenters. To this information, the preliminary information sheet of the conference has been attached. We are pleased to offer participation at the conference to all the interested persons.

In recent months, PannErgy has repeatedly called the attention to the broad-scaling changes taking place in the European energy industry, partly triggered by the economic and financial crisis. Although investors are cautious, still the opportunities offered by renewable energies seem to generate increasing and clear interests. It is obvious that the development of the infrastructure associated with renewable energies is becoming more and more urgent, which is reflected in the acceleration of related economic, technological and regulatory processes.

For the member states of the European Union, it is increasingly important to frame their energy strategies towards the accomplishment of the 2020 objectives. The Vienna conference is a proper venue and opportunity for the decision-makers of politics, the public sphere and economy to exchange ideas. This heightened interest is well indicated by the fact that in addition to the specialist policy-makers of the EU and national governments the event will be attended by global energetic companies, institutional investors, as well as counseling and legal companies involved in energy-related matters.
